Thirty-First Sunday in Ordinary Time

Hebrews 7:23–28

Reliable Worker

In some restaurants it’s hard to keep employees. People apply, say they want to work, joyfully accept the job, and then start. Soon they find out why it’s called “work.” Bussing tables, taking orders, delivering food, seating customers, preparing the bill, getting change—it all takes personal attention to a large number of people at one time. Not everyone can do it. Potential employees like the idea of working around food and people, but many of them don’t last. They come and go.

Workers who stick around long enough to learn the business and the customers have exceptional value. Until they retire. Or go on disability. Or, God forbid, die.

Nothing is permanent. Even the most valued people in our lives leave. Others step in to take their place. Some do nicely. Some don’t. They never fully replace the loss of someone we admired. The Letter to the Hebrews acknowledges this situation among Levitical priests in the Old Testament. “They were prevented by death from remaining in office.” There had to be many priests from one generation to the next, because no priest was permanent.

Until Jesus. “Jesus, because he remains forever, has a priesthood that does not pass away.” He lives forever to make intercession for us. He is always on the job. He helps us in time of need. We will come and go, but Jesus lives forever.
